

What is this sticker for?

Labeling Edible Excess helps foragers easily locate and rescue this perfectly good food from its path to the landfill. And it settles your fears about consumption because now you know the parasites will take care of its excess.

Food you should label:

blighted, bruised, imperfect, damaged and past its due date.

Place it prominently in view:

On garbage bags or cans you know contain Edible Excess or sites with Edible Excess such as: garbage pick-up areas outside restaurants, bakeries supermarkets, coffee shops and anywhere you know there is Edible Excess.

For more information about urban foraging:

<http://freegan.info/?page=nyc>

Edible Excess is an unlicensed icon for the public domain

www.forays.org

What is Edible Excess?

Edible Excess is all the food considered no longer viable for commercial sale or personal consumption. Edible Excess doesn't live up to the shallow standard of an economy based on consumption and waste.